Over the millennia of history, ideas about freedom have changed significantly. If in the past it was, first of all, the desire to free oneself from enslavement, exploitation and oppression, then for a modern person freedom consists in the ability to make one's choice, the right to act according to one's own will, without coercion.

Until now, the question of the relationship between freedom and law is the most important and most relevant for study.

Since time immemorial, many philosophers, lawyers and researchers have raised the question of defining the boundaries of freedom. A person's freedom ends where another man's freedom begins. This fact has been affirmed from Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes to John Stuart Mill and Abraham Lincoln.

But how can these boundaries of freedom be determined so that they are respected by all citizens, and fines and sanctions threaten for non-compliance? The answer is – law (international and internal).
